GLARING LIGHTS CAUSE ACCIDENT

Man and Wife Hurt; Orland Park Fire Chief Renders First Aid

Blinding headlights from an approaching auto caused a serious accident on 143rd street near the Stahulik farm Sunday evening. A car in which Matt Schulte, his wife and two children of South Chicago were riding, was overturned three times in the ditch when Mrs. Schulte, who was driving, became momentarily blinded by the strong headlights of an approaching car and ran off the pavement.

The Schulte's were driving east on 143rd when the accident occurred. A number of cars stopped but no one offered to aid the injured, until Fire Chief John Helenhouse of Orland Park came along in his car. He immediately gave orders that Mr. Schulte who had suffered a deep gash on the head and several broken ribs, and his wife who had sustained a cut under the right eye, together with the children who escaped injury, be placed in his car which was done, and he took them to his barbershop in Orland Park. Here Mr. Helenhouse who is in charge of the Red Cross First Aid Station in Orland Park, rendered first aid to the injured, then called the county highway police who took Mr. Schulte to the Oak Forest Infirmary hospital and Mrs. Schulte and the children to their home in South Chicago.

The Schulte's had just traded in another car for a new 1936 Chevrolet which they were driving at the time of the accident. The new car was badly damaged.

Torch Light Parade Draws Big Crowd To Frankfort

The political campaign in the eastern part of Will County wound up in a grand burst of red fire, oratory and was climaxed by a real old time torch light parade of the type in vogue during the Bryan-McKinley campaign in 1896, Wednesday night of this week. One of the largest crowds seen in Frankfort for a long time, came to see the big parade which started from the Frankfort school grounds at 7:15 p. m., headed by the Frankfort band.

Many of the marchers carried the old time torch lights and the great crowd lining the streets cheered the marchers. After the parade, a mass meeting which was attended by an over-flow crowd, was held in the Frankfort hall.

The speakers of the evening were Attorney Edw. Nadelhoffer of Joliet who spoke on national issues and Mr. James Bell, also of Joliet, who spoke on the state and county issues.

The Republican county candidates were present and made brief remarks. A musical program was much enjoyed and at the close of the rally, refreshments were served.

Signs Warrant For Peddler In Potato Deal

There is one Will county woman who believes in getting what she pays for—even potatoes.

She is Mrs. Rhoda Lish, 49th and Lincoln Highway, Frankfort.

Mrs. Lish purchased a sack of potatoes from a peddler two weeks ago. The peddler showed her fine Idaho potatoes and then sold her a sack of smaller ones.

Now the sheriff's office holds a warrant for the arrest of Frank Rutkowski, 4116 North Mango St., said to have been the peddler. The warrant was issued by Justice of the Peace Joseph H. Hartley and signed by Mrs. Lish.

Former Will County State's Attorney Endorses Burke

Robert W. Martin of Joliet, who was the most popular state's attorney Will County had in many years, is backing the candidacy of James E. Burke on the Republican ticket for this office and has sent out the following letter to his friends urging them to vote for Mr. Burke:

"I trust that you will be willing, in the interests of good government, to vote for and use your influence to elect James E. Burke as State's Attorney."

"I can vouch for him since his childhood. He is kind, courteous, and is always a gentleman. He is blessed with an abundance of good plain common sense, is energetic, fearless, and one of the leading trial lawyers of the County. His record during his six years activity as Assistant State's Attorney has established his ability to take care of all of the duties of said office in a manner acceptable to all law-abiding citizens."

"His background, associates and interests are such that the hoodlums do not want him elected as State's Attorney, and they are concentrating their efforts to defeat him. This alone should cause all those interested in good government to rally to his support."

"I am sending this letter to you in the interests of the people of Will County, and I neither expect nor desire any reward from Mr. Burke."

"As you are interested in the welfare of Will County and believe in the enforcement of law and order, I appeal to you to vote for James E. Burke, and to urge your friends and neighbors to do likewise."

Wilfred Neidringhaus, the News-Bulletin carrier at Lincoln Estates found a purse this week and finally located the owner, by going from door to door. Odd Craft Devised for Treasure Hunting

This strange-looking craft, composed mostly of derricks and diving apparatus, is the salvage ship with which Simon Lake, famous submarine inventor, believes he has located the long-sought hulk of the British frigate Hussar and the gold and silver treasure said to be in her hold. The inventor is shown aboard the craft near the spot in New York's East river where the sunken hulk of the treasure ship is believed to lie.

BILLY MINK HAS SOME GOOD HUNTING

BILLY MINK loves to hunt. He is one of the best hunters among the little people of the Green Forest and the Green Meadows. Not even Reddy Fox is a better hunter than Billy Mink. In the first place, Billy has a wonderful nose. He can follow the scent of a mouse quite as well as can Reddy Fox. Then, too, Billy possesses sharp ears.

The instant Billy caught the scent of Robber the Rat at the edge of the hole in the floor of that barn he forgot all about the hens over in the henhouse. He popped up through the hole on to the barn floor, and his nose found the scent of Robber the Rat stronger than ever. Billy began to follow it just as Bowser the Hound follows the scent of Reddy Fox. It led straight over to a grain bin.

Just as Billy reached one end of the grain bin a big gray rat with two others at his heels scrambled out of the other end of the grain bin, and with squeaks of fright scampered away. How they had known of his coming, Billy didn't know. Probably they had smelled him, for Billy has quite a strong scent of his own. Anyway, they had discovered his presence.

With a bound Billy was after them. Almost at once the three rats separated. Billy didn't hesitate. He followed the largest one. He followed him with his nose. That was all he needed to guide him.

Now that rat knew every nook and corner and every hiding place in that big barn. Also he knew that there was no place big enough for him to get into which Billy Mink could not get into, and fear gave speed to his legs. Behind and under boxes, over grain bins, squeezing through narrow places, and racing across open spaces, the rat ran with Billy behind him. At last he was cornered.

Instantly that rat changed completely. He whirled about and faced Billy Mink, showing savage teeth. He was big and strong, and he intended to fight. For just an instant Billy Mink stopped. Now a rat is quick, but Billy Mink is quicker. That rat was no coward. He fought, and he fought hard, but he fought in vain. He could not get those wicked-looking teeth of his into Billy. In less time than it takes to tell it, the fight was over, and Billy Mink has his dinner.

Now Billy knew all about Robber the Rat and his relatives. He knew that they were outcasts among all

WHEN ENTERTAINING

FOR the hostess who must prepare and serve everything, such dishes as may be prepared the day before will save her strength, good looks and enjoyment of her guests.

One can do marvelous things with just a pickle. Cut into the thinnest of slices, spread in the form of a fan on a tasty sandwich it not only garnishes it but adds an appetizer as well.

Slice inch-sized pickles into very thin slices, place on open-faced sandwiches that have been spread with cream cheese. Put one slice in the center of rounds, on the tiny slice place a spot of whipped cream or cheese mixed with cream and dust with cayenne or paprika. If finger-length sandwiches are used, place the round of pickle at the end and at the other end a spot the size of a quarter of finely shredded carrot.

A Man's Salad.

Prepare a half dozen hard cooked eggs by cutting into halves and removing the yolks, mash the yolks with butter, add mustard, salt and cayenne and refill the halves of egg white. Arrange on lettuce and cover with a sour cream dressing or a mayonnaise with plenty of sour cream added. If liked shredded onion may be sprinkled over the lettuce before placing the eggs.

Here is another that the men like: Take one head of lettuce, three or four green onions or a slice of ber-length, slightly tapered, with broad nails.

The thumb of this type is always of great length, this being most noticeable within the space between the second and the nail joint. The palm and undersides of the fingers are quite flat.

Possessors of the Mental Type of hand are invariably great readers and of a scholarly turn of mind. They are nearly always conservative and deeply analytical in approaching any problem, refraining from an expression of positive opinion until painstaking research and deduction have produced incontrovertible evidence.

In the hand of this type with square rather than elongated palm, we are sure to find indication of the man or woman who puts his or her love of study to practical use in religious endeavor, literature or science. With the Mental Type of decidedly elongated palm, however, there is apt to be a tendency to scorn the use of scholarly attainments as a means of acquiring wealth and worldly goods.

MEASUREMENT

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

PROUD science prates of depths of seas, As though it were the depth of these That be sounded—with delight Measures a mountain crested white, Its most remotest mysteries, And calls its poor dimension height.

But these the measures men must know: How deep another mortal's woe, That men may lift him up again. Though science will be silent then, Men must quit measuring the snow, The ocean floor, and measure men.

Yes, surely mortals might employ Themselves with life, and not some toy: Might better measure heights of bliss, The heights that otherwise they miss, Might find the world's God-given joy, And of the world that follows this.

We waste our time too much on things, While thought is all that loves and sings— Though down within the depths it went, Regains the heights most excellent, And to the poorest mortal brings The joys beyond all measurement.

"Make It Snappy," Says Maudie

A Matter of Preference

By DOROTHY N. RILEY

© McClure Newspaper Syndicate, WNU Service.

JOHN OLCOTT'S parents had his wife all selected for him when Johnny was eighteen. Her name was Franceska, and she was a blonde.

Johnny was a gentleman but he didn't prefer her.

Franceska had money—a gold symphony of it—which explains everything. Johnny's parents had a name that meant something; the kind you put a "the" before, and can say best if you affect lorgnettes.

Franceska's people, whose name was Blake, wanted to mix the soft, resonant sound of the name of Olcott with the pleasant golden jingle of the Blake mint.

Johnny, at nineteen, was just a regular kid, a little above the average as to looks, very normal as to intelligence, and a firm believer in that Hollywood-originated slogan, "Be yourself or stay at home!"

Franceska, more or less away to school, had been in the background considerably until her eighteenth birthday. Then, she and Johnny became as inseparable as the Fourth of July and fireworks, simply because it was expected of them. If they found the affair a trifle flat as to romantic interest, they said nothing. They were Twentieth century sports.

Johnny thought she was terrible, but his parents were good scouts and had always stood by him, and he knew that they had educated him and taught him to be charming for Franceska Blake only. He felt he'd better play the game a little while for their sakes, and let them down easy. Then, too, of course, he didn't want to hurt Franceska's feelings. She was, he felt sure, greatly enamored of him. Johnny figured this out reluctantly, banking wholly on the expression in her eyes. (Not for nothing had Franceska doled out 50 cent pieces to the cinema industry.)

Franceska thought Johnny too childish for her technique. She wanted a he-man from the famous "great open spaces," wherever they were. Not in Boston, anyway, she decided. She had a good car and had tried to park it. She was getting old, Franceska reflected bitterly, and Johnny was the best material on hand. Then, too, she didn't want to hurt him too much. There was no ignoring the fact that he had been simply bowled over with her blonde loveliness from the start. He deserved, decided Franceska, some credit for that.

In a short while the inevitable happened. Johnny saw a brunette he wanted to meet. Franceska's pale, honeycolored sweetness was getting on his nerves. She was so nice! (Say it with your teeth together.) He decided his parents had an awful nerve to ask him to marry for money anyway, and he told them so.

The war was on. About the same time Franceska met a fellow whom she felt she could love, with a little honest persuasion. She was tired of Johnny. He was too perfect. She told her ma and pa and the war was on in that camp, too.

All this time Johnny and Franceska were going together—trying to be a couple of prize dumbbells, and both feeling like glorified martyrs because they were refraining from hurting each other's feelings.

Goodness knows how it would have ended if the two of them hadn't gone for a drive one lovely day. It happened that Franceska had been up half the night before with that species of toothache best described as gallopin', and Johnny had had a row with his family, only to come out with defeat and a splitting headache. You can see for yourself that they were stripped of pretense, company manners, and good nature. It didn't take long for the fireworks to start. They commenced with Johnny casually calling Franceska "Cesky," and for no good reason.

"Don't you dare call me that!" Franceska turned fierce eyes upon him.

Johnny was surprised at the placid Franceska bursting into flame like that, but he quickly lost his surprise in his grouch.

"What's the matter with it?" "I hate it, that's all! It's worse than Lizz or Maggie."

"My mother's name is Maggie."

"Oh," said Franceska. "What do you mean by making fun of my mother's name?" demanded Johnny, all keyed up for an argument.

"I didn't. I just said—" "Blah! You knew her name was Maggie, all the time. I can't stand girls like you!"

"Why try it any longer?" Franceska asked, in a voice that had an icicle licked to a frazzle, as far as being cold goes.

"Try? Me? Ha-ha! You're the one who's been making all the heavy effort!"

"Me? You don't suppose I'd pick out anything like you, do you? Not while I have my mental health! I suppose you've been sitting around like an Egyptian mummy all these weeks!"

"Speaking of King Tut—you're not my idea of a queen, that's all."

"Oh!"

"Don't squander your words so."

Silence.

Lots more of it, heavy and impenetrable.

"You make me sick!" This from Johnny, and incidentally the end of the silence.

"You make me positively ill!"

They drove on—and on. Johnny was looking at Franceska out of the corner of his eye, and was thinking, "Gee, she has a comeback! Who would have guessed it? Look at that color! Boy—what fun I missed not getting her peeved before this! A little pep to her, at that. Why the dickens didn't she come to life before? Zowie, what a jam!"

He began to feel better and to be surprisingly glad that Franceska was beside him—so little, and flushed and, yes, blonde and cute! Franceska had her thoughts, too. She felt lost. "The nerve of him!"

She tried to concentrate on that and couldn't. He had a line, after all, and she had thought him dumb. Good looking kid—sort of sweet.

Why hadn't she been bright enough to see through him? Of course he didn't like her. But why hadn't he snapped out of his stupor before, and shown a little spirit? What was the matter with her, anyway? A minute ago she hated him and now she was actually happy sitting beside him listening to his insults.

Despite the fact that she clenched her fists and dug her toes into her shoes, Franceska couldn't keep back a fat tear that trickled down her nose and dropped off into her lap. It didn't splash, but Johnny must have heard it, as he was looking away. He stopped the car.

"Franceska," he said in a new tone, "Say, don't cry—please."

"Who cares?"

"I do—honestly, Franny, all of a sudden. I do."

Johnny spoke emphatically, almost with gusto. Franceska was surprised. So was Johnny. However, ter than to flash an April smile at that stage of the game so she blubbered, "B-but you d-don't like blondes: Y-you l-like brunettes."

"What's your idea in bringing that up, anyway?" said Johnny. "Light or dark I'm sold on you!"

"O Johnny, I like you, too," said Franceska, now staging perfectly her April smile.

"Then," said Johnny, after he kissed her, I guess we're engaged."

Franceska giggled. "Won't our mammas and papas be pleased?"

"Look here," said Johnny, sharply, placing his hands on Franceska's shoulders and turning her to face him. "Our parents don't figure in this racket at all! A good little healthy jam showed me the way to go home, and I get all the credit—see? I prefer you. I run this outfit. See?"

"Yes, dear," cooed Franceska, and Johnny, pacified and feeling as big as a great moment, started the car.

Geisha Girls Are Fading From the Chorine Clais

Geisha girls still are charming and beautiful, but competition from other forms of entertainment is causing a steady although gradual decline in the number of geisha establishments, writes a Tokio United Press correspondent.

The popularity of so-called social saloons where pretty hostesses entertain the patrons, has cut into the demand for geisha singing and dancing, while the movies and girl revues have taken away another segment of the diversion - seeking public.

Geisha are paid from 3 to 15 yen an hour ($90 to $1.50) to entertain in the tea-houses. The rate of pay depends upon the individual training, talents and accomplishments. It is a steep price for the ordinary citizen and he can have delightful feminine company in the resorts at a much more modest figure.

The geisha are among the more prosperous classes in Japan. The latest income tax figures place the annual income of a noted geisha, Katsutaro, at about $5,400.

The newest census of geisha establishments shows that the number of geisha in Japan has declined from 100,000 to 78,500 in the last ten years. The number in Tokio is 9,925, a fairly constant figure since this is the capital and there are many official or semi-official affairs at which geisha are in demand.

A new regulation that girls can not serve as hangyoku, or apprentice geishas, until they are fifteen, has also decreased the number of geisha. Formerly girls were started on this career at an early age, sometimes before reaching their teens.

Many geisha live by themselves, in snug little houses, with their professional "mamas" or managers and the girls have paid off the cost of servants. This is possible only when the girls have paid off the cost of their training. Others are grouped in geisha establishments, like professional troupes, with strict discipline prevailing and the managers handling the engagements and financial dealings.

The cabaret form of entertainment as known in the west is not permitted here. There are dance halls with dancing partners available at 20 sen per dance. But floor-show entertainment is not countenanced, the nearest thing to it in the western sense being the all-girl revues.

Life of Rail Ties Lengthened
Due to chemical treatment, the average life of a cross tie used by the railroads is now from twenty-five to thirty years. Before this practice of treating ties was adopted, the average life was from five to eight years, according to the Association of American Railroads.

Washington Digest

National Topics Interpreted By WILLIAM BRUCKART

NATIONAL PRESS BLDG. WASHINGTON, D. C.

Washington — During the recent bitter campaigning, both national political parties engaged in a good deal of palaver about the coal industry.

The Coal Industry

As usual, the politicians were patting the miners on the back, telling them what wonderful assets to the nation they are, and carrying their demagoguery further by criticism of the mine owners every now and then because it was popular with labor to attack employers. Altogether, it was a rather sorry spectacle and, I think, did not do credit to either side to any extent.

But in this report, I want to stress a very much less obvious phase of the problem than was made apparent in any of the electioneering. With all of the verbiage cast aside, with all of the political hoodwinking forgotten, there is a very deep and difficult problem in the coal industry. I think it can be summarized in one question: What is the future of coal, the coal industry, and the thousands of men who know no other source of livelihood than that which they eke out in the bowels of the earth?

This question, if proper analysis is made, encompasses more than the usual factors that operate in economics. It does that because of policies of the federal government, among states and among municipalities. Because of the attempts to influence votes, the whole question has got into politics and that of itself is ruinous, an obstacle to a scientific solution.

Not so many years ago coal mine owners and coal labor units had what amounted to a monopoly on our fuel supply. Then came oil, oil with all of the scientific development that followed in its wake. Despite this, operators and labor leaders continued to take their toll from the hapless user of coal for fuel, be that user a great factory or an individual consumer in furnace or round oak stove. But that was not all. Electricity came along with its constantly increasing automatic control. First, of course, in the larger communities and later it came to villages and farm homes. Still, the mine owners and the coal labor leaders followed an unwise course; still, they continued to take their toll and before they fully realized what the circumstance was, they had succeeded by their acts in building up a desire on the part of millions of people to use some other sort of fuel. The end is not yet, and that is why the subject is most important at this stage of our history.

During the Roosevelt administration we have seen an impetus given to public ownership of power plants never equalled. I think much of this development has gone on in a hit-and-niss fashion and that eventually the public will pay for the shiftless methods employed in development, but that is beside the point. The present question is whether our nation is going to continue to expand public ownership in such a way as to ruin an industry that is as much a part of our basic economic structure as any other unit of our natural life. I think sometimes it goes beyond that for the reason that, unless people awaken to the fact that they are being hoodwinked to a considerable extent by public ownership propaganda, it is likely to spread and public ownership will become a frankenstein, a parasite on our body public.

When I referred to the destruction of a great industry, I had in mind the thought that the consequences will run in two directions. Yet, paradoxically as it may seem, they constitute a cycle. It works out like this: As the demand for coal declines, it is quite natural that production costs go up. When production costs go up, they eventually reach the point where a further diminution occurs in demand. When that decline in demand occurs, there is only one answer: Labor is thrown out of work because you cannot produce and have those products piled high in storage. It takes money to keep labor and machinery occupied. The coal itself, after being removed from the mines, represents money and it is subject as well to deterioration. So, the ultimate to be expected on this side of the picture is an industry dying of dry rot.

On the other side of the problem is an equally important factor at work. It takes an immense amount of capital, massed in corporate form, to maintain a going concern whether that concern be coal mining, railroading or any other of our great industries. These industries operate largely on funds obtained through the sale of stocks and bonds of the corporation. But it has always been true, and human nature shows no signs of changing, that capital is not attracted to, it does not seek investment in, a declining industry. There you have a possibility at least of insufficient funds to carry through for the coal mining industry until it can readjust itself to the new place it must occupy in our economic structure. It will occupy a new place because it will readjust itself, but it has not done so yet and the consequence of this condition is, in my opinion, coal mine labor is due for some very hard sledding in the next decade, notwithstanding the honeyed words of the politicians.

Now, to turn to the part that government plays in bringing about present conditions. I have attempted to show how greed on the part of both capital and labor was responsible in a measure for building up what amounts to ill-will among many coal consumers. But the industry itself is not wholly responsible. Indeed, I rather hold the opinion that government is as much responsible for conditions as the industry itself, and when I say government, I must limit my reference to political demagogues. They always have been shortsighted and they are still shortsighted. They have been and they are now willing to sacrifice great masses of men and money for personal political gain of an entirely transitory character.

I have said before in these columns that the country is being sadly kidded—it is almost tragic—by the wonders of such parasitic organizations as TVA. The public ownership crowd have had a willing leader in President Roosevelt and his hangers-on have promoted his policies of public ownership without being honest as to the ultimate goal, or the eventual effect.

It is not alone that there have been millions wasted in the development of the Tennessee valley electrical mirage. It is not so much that taxpayers throughout the country will be paying a bill and paying it over and over again, that causes me to complain. It is not so much that the Tennessee Valley Authority will never economically operated or become self-sustaining that brings this outburst. It is the fact that when a government, national, state or local, leads the way in this direction, it wields an influence upon a certain percentage of our population. Since public ownership advocates, in many instances, plain socialism, where in control of these agencies such as TVA, it is perfectly natural that they present to the taxpayers only the most rosy side of the story. They do not disclose to the taxpayers the adverse, the costly side, of the situation. Naturally then, hundreds of thousands of people believe that government can do this sort of thing better than private enterprise. They become convinced that private initiative has been turned into a spigot through which individual pocketbooks are drained. They do not realize that their pocketbooks are being drained much more heavily through public ownership by means of the taxes they take from you and me and everyone else. That is the sad story, made worse by the fact that through nearly four years the Washington government has been encouraging people to believe public ownership propaganda and distrust and destroy private investment.

Recent Treasury figures show that the Resettlement Administration has paid approximately $27,750,000 of its total appropriation of $134,518,000 for administrative expenses. That is, the organization which is the pride and joy of Professor Rexford Guy Tugwell has paid that amount of money to job holders in trying to carry out the professor's impossible dream.

While the sum shown as used for administrative expenses by Professor Tugwell is small, compared to the billions of total waste in the Roosevelt administration, the proper way to consider this circumstance is on a percentage basis. If you take your pencil you can calculate that about 20 per cent or one-fifth of all the funds appropriated to Professor Tugwell for resettlement, has been used in management of his plan. It may be a fraction under 20 per cent, but it is so close that even the fastidious Mr. Tugwell would not quarrel about the difference.

One-fifth of an appropriation that is designed theoretically at least to serve for relief purposes is entirely too much. It is not as great perhaps as has happened with one or two other relief appropriations, but it has always been claimed that the Tugwell scheme was planned to re-establish those who have been resettled on a permanent basis. That is to say, it was planned that the bulk of the money should be used in providing those people with a fresh start in life, but I cannot see where they are getting the full measure of help intended if a lot of job holders sit around in Washington offices or in offices in various states using up one-fifth of the total lay-out of cash.

The Bored Are Boring—

People of Outstanding Personality Are Interested, and Never Blase

"YOUNG people of today," a mother writes, "seem to regard it as a sign of immaturity or weakness to be thrilled with anything. Their idea of sophistication is to appear bored with everything, the having-done-all-seen-all attitude that finds it very difficult to be impressed with anything. It is most annoying to find that anything you can offer them for a good time seems to be inadequate, that the thrills of your own youth cannot be repeated for them. It seems to me they miss a great deal."

I would point out to this mother, says a woman writer of international note, that naturally we cannot expect that the thrills of our youth will equally impress the young people of this day. So much that came to us gradually as colorful experiences are a part of their daily background. But there is something definitely true in what she says of a pose, of a deliberate care never to seem impressed, of a pretense at being bored.

It may interest such young people to know that that sophisticated, G. K. Chesterton, said "there are no bores, only people who are bored." In other words there can be nothing interesting about a person who is bored!

That takes us right down to a bedrock fact that can be observed if we will note people of outstanding personality, people whom everybody finds interesting. Without exception they will be people who are vitally interested. They are never bored, never blase. They are able to give out what interests others, because through their interest in things and people about them they are constantly taking in. Their main charm is a certain aliveness, a vitality which has absolutely no relationship with being bored.

Uncle Phil Says:

A Man in Trouble

No matter how uncouth a man may be, if his character is firm and he faces trouble like a man, your heart warms to him.

Give a newly met man a chance to show his good qualities before rejecting him as a friend.

Solitude is not to be considered solely from a selfish standpoint. Society may profit much through the frequent individual adoption of it.

Our Failing

Crime goes unpunished because backbone coupled with indignation is not a frequent combination.

In youth, credulity is enormous, and skepticism is enormous; there is no middle ground; and both are amusing.

Country people are surprised when a city man complains of crowds. They enjoy them.

Chicago Plans Huge Live Stock Exhibit

Chicago, Oct. 30—America's annual continental congress of agriculture, the International Live Stock Exposition, will be held November 28 to December 5 in the new International Amphitheatre at the Chicago Stock Yards.

It will be the 37th renewal of this largest annual exhibition of purebred farm animals and crops in the country, and according to the management, one of the biggest shows in its history.

Expect 13,000 Animals
B. H. Heide, secretary-manager of the Exposition, states that plans are now under way to house over 13, 000 animals at the 1936 show. He reports that entries are pouring in from leading stockmen and farmers in nearly every state in the Union and Province of Canada, listing their prize herds and flocks for the competitions that will feature more than 30 different breeds of draft and light horses, beef cattle, sheep and swine.

Approximately $100,000 will be paid in cash premiums to winning exhibitors in the various divisions of the Exposition, says Heide.

Entries for the live stock classes will close on November 1, with the exception of the carlot contests for commercial stock that are displayed in the stock yard open pens. Feeders have until November 21 to reserve space for exhibits in this event.

All of the purebred herds; steers, wethers, and pigs listed for individual competitions; and displays of farm crops in the International Grain and Hay Show, largest competitive farm crops show in the world. Entries will be accepted until November 20 for this department in which over a thousand cash prizes will be offered in 95 different classes.

Noted Speaker At Frankfort Rep. Women's Meeting

given a glad welcome. Mr. Krusemark spoke briefly of the national issues and showed the importance of voting the straight Republican ticket.

In Mrs. Muckelstone's opening remarks she, traced the history of this republic and showed how the Constitution came into being and the reason for it, and the progress this country has made under its form of government. The speaker showed a large poster in red, white and blue, of the Communist party, which had the word in large type, "Communism Is 20th Century Americanism", and also a small certificate of the communist campaign, showing the picture of their president elect, Mr.
Browder and their vice president, elect, Mr. James. Ford, a colored man, and behind him the word,
"Farmer-Labor Party", showing the tie-up of that party.

Mrs. Muckelstone said that Mr.
Frankfurter, the mastermind of the New Deal, is said to be slated by the New Deal, if that party wins this election, to fill the first vacancy on the Supreme Court.

It was stated that there are 7-500,000 unnaturalized aliens in this country; 6 million are on relief and here, 1,500,000 are on relief and 3-500,000 are here illegally. The speaker told of Mr. Tugwell, who in 1929 served in the socialist campaign for the election of Mr. Thomas as president, and who also is the author of the book, "Soviet Russia Second Decade". She also told of the recommendation made by Mr. Hopkins, WPA Administrator, of the book written by Mr. Browder, "What

MOKENA

The monthly meeting of the Garden Club will be held in the home of Mrs. Harry Mall Tuesday Nov. 3rd. Last Friday evening, Mrs. Steele's M. D. Sunday school class enjoyed a Hallowe'en party in her home. Each guest provided a game or stunt and these were followed by a Treasure Hunt which led the party thru dark and spooky places. The class is organized as "The Mnemos-years" and the next regular meeting will be held in the home of Miss Genevieve Pfleger.

The first meeting of a recently organized bridge club was held in the home of Elsworth McGovney last Wednesday evening. The next meeting will be held in the home of Mrs. Albert Cappel when her niece Miss Margaret Krusemark will entertain the club.

SCHOOL NEWS

Primary Room—A Hallowe'en party was greatly enjoyed in Miss Doig's room Thursday afternoon after recess. A parade of costumed children went from room to room. A prize was presented to the boy and girl having the best costumes. Games were played. Refreshments were served. The children and Miss Doig wish to thank the mothers for the refreshments.

Intermediate Room—There are two charts in this room, one for spelling and one for arithmetic. For every five hundreds in spelling each pupil receives a gold star and for every five hundreds in arithmetic each pupil receives a gold star. In fifth grade, Jean Shevlin is leading the contest with six gold stars, while in the fourth grade, Shirley Weichbrodt and Lois Mancke are both leading their class. In arithmetic, Marjorie Marti is the winner at present in the fifth grade. She has five red stars. In fourth grade, Billy Homerding, Violet Hurley, Lois Mancke and Shirley Marti are all tied with four red stars. The fifth grade pupils have just started map work in Geography and are very interested in it.

"Chevrolet Breakfast" From Coast To Coast

Chevrolet dealer employees throughout the United States will celebrate the public announcement of Chevrolet's new 1937 models with several thousand "Chevrolet Breakfasts," held simultaneously from coast to coast on the morning of Nov. 7th, when the new cars make their formal bow. W. E. Holler, vice-president and general sales manager of Chevrolet, announced the breakfast program this week, explaining that it celebrated this year's all-time sales record and the outlook for new records in 1937.

More than 50,000 employees will sit down to the breakfast, Mr. Holler said. Immediately following the event, showrooms will be thrown open for the first public inspection of the new models which are being kept a closely-guarded secret up to the announcement date.

"In spite of the fact that the new cars have not yet been shown thousands of the new Chevrolets have been ordered for immediate delivery" said Mr. Holler. "It is doubtful if any industrial organization ever received a more eloquent endorsement than that which thousands of men and women have given Chevrolet this year, by placing their orders for the new models before they were introduced in fact, before anything at all was known of them except that they were Chevrolets.

"The engineering department and the manufacturing department have given the public an outstanding product and it is gratifying to know that their efforts are fully appreciated that Chevrolet cars and trucks and the institution behind them, enjoy such a reputation that America will unhesitatingly purchase thousands of these products before anyone outside the factory knows definitely what they will be like."

Specimen of Ballot to be voted at an Election in Will County, Illinois, Tuesday, November 3, 1936. HENRY KOERNER, County Clerk.

(Place a cross (x) in the square opposite the statement below indicating the way you desire to vote on the proposition.)

"Shall an additional tax in excess of the constitutional limit of seventy-five cents per one hundred dollars of assessed valuation of one and one-half (1½) mills on each dollar of assessed valuation of taxable property be levied for each of the years 1937 to 1942, inclusive, for the purpose of operating and maintaining the County Tuberculosis Sanitarium of Will County, Illinois, and to be in lieu of the tax of thirteen-twentieths (13/20ths) of a mill on the dollar authorized to be levied for that purpose at the regular judicial election held June 5, 1933?"

FOR additional tax in excess of constitutional limit of seventy-five cents per one hundred dollars assessed valuation.

AGAINST additional tax in excess of constitutional limit of seventy-five cents per one hundred dollars assessed valuation.

Seek Fund by Ballot for Will Co. Tubercular Sani.

When the voters go to the polls next Tuesday they will receive two ballots, the large general ballot containing the names of candidates for national, state and county candidates and a small ballot which will decide the fate of the Will county tuberculosis sanitarium.

The sanitarium, because of increased demands upon its facilities and the necessity of improving its equipment to keep pace with the advance made in the treatment of tubercular patients, plus the increased cost of food supplies, finds itself suffering from a lack of funds to carry on its work, according to the trustees of the institution.

It was only within the past two weeks that the sanitarium paid its employees and creditors salaries and bills that have been due for the past five months. Payment of these obligations was made possible thru the sale of tax warrants.

In order to meet the expenses of the sanitarium without recourse to loans, the trustees are asking for a slight increase in the tax levy—seventeen-twentieths of a mill. This increase, it is agreed, will not cause any noticeable rise in the tax bill of an individual, but spread as it is over the entire county it will be sufficient to enlarge the revenues of the sanitarium to a point where it can continue in operation and without the necessity of borrowing thru the sale of tax anticipation warrants.

According to county authorities the increase in tax will be less of a burden to the public than the payment of interest on tax warrants.

The sanitarium now has one of the most modern X-ray units in use and such equipment is recognized by the medical profession as indispensable in the treatment of tuberculosis. The number of patients in which the disease has been arrested and the sufferers returned to their homes on the road to recovery has been growing steadily, the records show.

Catholic and Protestant clergy throughout the county, civic organizations, women's clubs, lodges and fraternal societies are united in endorsing the sanitarium's plea for an increase in revenue, as are the central committees of the two major political parties.

The only danger to the proposal, it was pointed out, lies in the fact that the voters may forget to mark the small ballots.

To return the small ballot unmarked it was explained, is the same as voting "NO", because under the law the affirmative side of the proposition must receive a majority of all the votes cast in the election.

It is estimated that the total vote in the election will total approximately 53,000. That would mean that at least 26,501 persons must vote "YES" for the small ballot to carry.

The trustees of the sanitarium urge the public to vote for the proposal that victims of tuberculosis may be better cared for and that the institution may continue to operate.

Edward J. Hughes Reports Big Saving For Auto Owners

Owners of passenger automobiles in Will County saved $32,796.00 in state license fees during the first eight months of 1936, Secretary of State Edward J. Hughes reported yesterday.

The reduced schedule of fees, which became effective January 1, was brought about through the efforts of Secretary Hughes. The reduction amounts to approximately 15 per cent per car.

"While the cut in fees has resulted in a saving to car owners of $2,135,872.00 for the first eight months of the year," said Secretary Hughes, "it has not reduced the revenue of our office. In fact, quite to the contrary, motor vehicle license fees up to September 1, show an increase of $233,339.00 over the full twelve months of last year."

"Registrations have been substantially increased. We already have reached an all-time high for registrations, the number of vehicles registered during the first eight months of the year being in excess of 14,000 over the peak period of all time, which was in 1930."

License plates next year, according to Mr. Hughes, will have a canary yellow background with black numerals. Application forms, it was stated, will be ready for distribution before the end of the month, and license plates will be issued soon after December 1.

O'Neill, Wood and Perry Endorsed By Voters League

The Democratic campaign swung into the last lap this week with the legislative race still holding the spot light in both DuPage and Will counties, the numerous attempts of Dominic A. Romano to remove the name of his Democratic colleague, Jos. Sam Perry, from the ballot having collapsed with the Supreme Court's decision ruling that Perry's name should remain on the ballot.

However, Dominic A. Romano's principal sponsor, Judge Edwin L. Wilson, who rendered the decision favorably to Romano in the Circuit Court of Will County, is leaving no stone unturned to obtain three votes for his candidate. After his decision against Perry was reversed by the Supreme Court, Judge Wilson went before the Veteran's meeting in Joliet in Loughran's hall, Thursday, October 22nd, 1936 and spoke on behalf of Romano asking that Will County voters give all three of their votes to Romano in order to defeat Perry. Observers pointed out that this action only bore out Perry's charge that Judge Wilson was interested in the outcome of the election and should not have heard the case in the beginning and further that even if Perry's charges were not well founded, that a Circuit Judge is far overstepping the bounds of the judicial propriety when he interests himself in the outcome of a case in which he has been a judge.

Further demonstrating Judge Wilson's interest in the defeat of Perry and the election of Romano, the Joliet Free Press is carrying front page editorials along the same lines as advanced by Wilson, who is reliably reported to own an interest in and control the policies of this paper.

So far Perry has remained discretely quiet and has sought to support the straight Democratic ticket, ignoring the efforts of his colleague's supporter to select only one Democratic member of the General Assembly.

Meanwhile, considerable interest is being revived in the recommendations of the Legislative Voters League, a non-partisan body which makes investigations of the qualifications of candidates for the General Assembly. Only in the recommendation of this body have Representatives Wood and O'Neill been called to the attention of the voters. The report and recommendation in this body was favorable to both of the legislators and classified Jos. Sam Perry as highly qualified, giving him their recommendation, while on the other hand the same body said that Dominic A. Romano was unqualified and refused to recommend him, leaving the recommendation of this non-partisan body to stand for Wood, O'Neill and Perry, for the next three members of the General Assembly from the 41st Senatorial district.

The human element in driving is the problem on our highways today. Construction of highways is constantly being improved, especially along safety lines.

The human element must be educated. The driver of a car must realize his responsibility. Schools, clubs, safety organizations, societies and many other groups of people are trying desperately to instill into the mind of every automobile driver that proper training in the handling of an automobile is necessary. It is easy to train the higher types of apes, dogs, cats, and even lower animals to operate a car in a circus ring to the satisfaction of an audience, but it is sometimes humanly impossible to instill into the minds of some drivers the absolute necessity for safe driving.

GHOSTS GOBLINS GHOULS & GOATS

THEY'RE all about on Halloween—ghosts, goblins, ghouls and goats—the first three generally for the purpose of getting your fourth. And they are generally accompanied by their time-honored attendants such as witches on broomsticks, black cats, owls, bats, imps, and grinning pumpkin heads.

Drown Your Fears

A bite to eat is distinctly in order after all the excitement of an evening in company with such an unholy crew, and this is the sort of fare we would recommend.

Red Devil on Toast: Add two cups grated cheese to the contents of one can tomato soup, and heat until melted. Add the contents of one No. 2 can peas and half the contents (one cup) of a No. 2 can red kidney beans. Season to taste with salt and pepper, and heat thoroughly. Serve on toast and lay crisp curls of bacon on top. Serves eight.

Goblin Salad: Make a dressing by shaking together three tablespoons olive oil, six tablespoons canned pear syrup, four teaspoons lemon juice, one teaspoon sugar, one-fourth teaspoon salt, one-eighth teaspoon cloves, one-eighth teaspoon cinnamon, and one-eighth teaspoon allspice.

Pour this over the drained pears from a No. 2 can, and let stand in the ice box for several hours. Make a nest of shredded cabbage, well crisped in water, or of shredded lettuce on each salad plate. In the center pile one cup cubed apple with the red skin left on. Invert a pear half over the apple, and on it make a goblin face, using cloves for eyes and nose and a bit of cherry or pimiento for the mouth. Pour over more dressing. Serves eight.

Frank M. Fulton

Republican candidate for Congress from this, the Third district, has conducted a successful business in the district for the past thirty years. He is the type of representative the District needs in Congress at this time.

Mr. Fulton is in the oil distributing business at 222-226 West 62nd street. He has one of the largest gasoline storage plants in Chicago, having paid the state of Illinois $240,000 in gasoline taxes in 1935.

He is a son of the late Henry D. Fulton, a former State Senator.

Mr. Fulton is fifty-seven years of age, is married, and lives at 317 West Marquette road.

If elected, he will apply the same methods he has in his private business to affairs of the Government. A Congress with a majority of his type will give the assurance of an economical administration of affairs for the Tax Payers of the country.

In order to protect and conserve the best interests of this District the election of Mr. Fulton is a necessity. He is qualified to represent the District as it should be represented.

He should be supported regardless of political affiliations. The Tax Payers, business and professional interests as well as the working man will have in him, if elected, a true representative.

John Erickson Republican League Issues Statement

Statement issued by the Executive committee of the John Erickson Republican League of Illinois in session at the Swedish club of Chicago, Saturday, October 17th, 1936 at 2 p. m.

After considering the many candidates and issues in this campaign, the committee issued the following statement:

"In these trying times, with 11 million American men and women unemployed, with over 20 million of our people on public relief rolls and with American ideals and free government challenged in high places, we cannot too strongly urge the thousands of members of our league as well as all other American citizens of Swedish descent, to dedicate themselves to the restoration of happiness and prosperity in American life, and to preservation of our principles and constitutional form of Government."

"We fully realize that this cannot be attained through the present Democratic National Administration, which is committed to regimentation, bureaucracy, squandering of public funds and burdening our people with huge and unprecedented taxation."

"Four more years of Franklin D. Roosevelt, Tugwell, Wallace, Ickes, Frankfurter and the other idle dreamers and bushy-haired theorists will destroy our freedom and reduce all of us to poverty."

"The election of Governor Landon and Frank Knox, supported by a Republican Congress, will restore confidence in industry, furnish employment and insure recovery."

"The election of Wayland Brooks as Governor will be a blessing to the poor folks in Illinois who have been virtually crushed under every form of conceivable taxation, especially the sales tax upon food, clothing and other necessities of life, which Mr. Brooks has pledged to abolish."

"The Senate of the United States needs badly the courage, ability, loyalty and leadership of Otis F. Glenn."

"Only by electing the entire Republican ticket can the tax-spenders, radicals and foreign philosophers be driven out of the temples of our Government."

"Oh, Bill!" said Jane. "Don't think of me—do just as I am not here." She threw her own arms around his neck, and their lips met again in passionate appeal.

"Then come, Jane. We must dash through this pine before that fire you hear roaring catches up to us."

"Is that awful roar from a fire, Bill?"

"It is. It's our worst danger. Let's go, Jane."

To cross the wide belt of pine their course lay obliquely downhill. If anything were needed to spur them on, the thunder of the fire sweeping down the forest behind served as a dread warning that they had only minutes left to escape disaster.

Halfway down the ridge, Denison paused to rest Jane in his arms. She was panting like an antelope.

"Brave girl!" he murmured. "Not a sob—not a tear—"

"But we must hurry, Bill," she panted.

"Get a little breath for the next run."

"Can we make it, Bill, dear?"

"We've got to make it," he muttered. "I'll save you, Jane, if it's the last thing I do in life."

"Don't save me unless you save yourself—remember that!"

"Come! We must make the spring—the spring!"

The timber was thinning, the ground growing rougher. The frontiersman and cowman who had gone through every adventure that befalls a man in a life of danger and escape made little of finding safe footing from rock to rock. But his charge had a harder time trying to keep her feet and to keep the pace. Denison offered to carry her. She would not hear of it.

He himself saw, before Jane realized it, that the end of her strength was at hand. Striving vainly to keep up, she stumbled and with a little moan fell forward on the ground. Denison picked her up in his arms. She could not speak; only panted. Her heart, pressed against his breast, pounded like a hammer.

"Put me down, Bill! Put me down!" she sobbed when she could breathe and form the words. "You must save yourself! Is the spring far, now?"

"Not far. Clasp your arms tight around my neck," was all he said, leaping along.

"You can't save us both; save yourself. You are dearer to me than my life, Bill."

"So are you to me. Hang on," he panted. "I'll never put you down!"

After another run he paused. "Bill, I can run a little now. Let me try it. Please, dear! Let me try!"

He shook his head and struggled on. The fire was only minutes behind him, its roar deafening.

A cry roused Jane in his arms.

"The spring!"

She cried to him in happy answer.

There was not an instant to spare. He slid down the steep side of the hollow that enclosed the spring. Jane, still in his arms, he rolled into the pool and lay panting beside her. The shock of the icy water revived her. He soused her head into the water. The pool was wide enough to submerge Jane, but not himself. He rolled in the shallower edge, wet himself all over and, holding her head just clear of the surface as she spluttered and coughed, gave her orders: "Keep your face down. Don't open your eyes. You're safe if you do exactly as I say."

Savage flames burst above their heads. The burning air showered searing fragments of bark and branch on them as they lay huddled, comforting each other with words. "Breathe carefully, Jane," he cried in her ear. "This air will wear your lungs. Fill your nose and mouth with water, spit and splutter it out. My God, it is upon us!"

The heart of the fire was on them. They could no longer hear or think. Flame belled and danced. Tongues of fire licked at their hiding heads. Denison mechanically dipped water into Jane's hair. Consciousness was nearly gone. Only the effort to live and the fierce instinct to protect the one he loved animated him.

With their trial of endurance almost at an end, a sudden explosion burst in the air above them. Denison, forgetting his caution, opened his eyes in the fear that a tree was falling. His eyeballs were scorched in a fraction of a second. He dashed his face back into the water; but mischief had been done. At last the terrific outburst abated. With the hope of life reanimated, the two rose in the pool in their steaming clothing. Darkness fell from the sky above, but the forest was lighted with smoking and burning tree torches, the afterglow of its destruction.

The two who had passed through and escaped a hideous catastrophe stood clasped in each other's arms thanking God and delirious in a new-found, intimate happiness.

"Water!" exclaimed Denison. "I'm perishing, in spite of my cold bath. Aren't you thirsty?"

"Yes, but not suffering. I didn't have to carry you, you know."

Moving a few feet up to the basin of the spring itself, they pushed aside debris from the water's surface, drank from their cupped hands and dashed water over their faces.

"Jane," said Denison when he rose again, "it was almost worth it for the way it's brought you and me together."

"It was," she whispered. "I've given you my trust."

"For all time, Jane?"

"For all time, Bill. Nothing shall ever part us, now."

CHAPTER VIII

Picking their way haltingly and cautiously down through smoking pines, dodging burning limbs that snapped and crackled menacingly overhead or crashed to the ground about them, the refugees emerged from the forest and could see that Denison's ranch buildings had escaped the flames.

The instant they reached the ranch house, Denison ran to the well, filled the water bucket, and carried it to Jane. Sitting on the ground, bare-headed, they slaked their thirst out of the dipper together.

Denison turned to the corral. Jane, who had gone into the house, had got the fire going and was slicing bacon when she heard the clatter of hoofs outside, and angry voices.

"Where's my daughter, you damned scoundrel?" were the first words she made out. The sound of the voice that uttered them sent her running, the knife still in her hand, to the door. Amazed to dumbness, she saw her father and McCrossen in the saddle, facing Denison, who stood at the gate of his corral.

"Van Tassel," Denison spoke carefully, "you're too old a man for me to quarrel with. Just remember you're on my property and keep a civil tongue in your head. I've taken more of your abuse in years gone by than I ought to take. Now put your question civilly."

"I don't want no truck with you, Denison," shouted Van Tassel, raging. "Where's my girl?"

McCrossen had reined about and was starting for the house. "Swing back here, McCrossen," Denison sang out sharply. "Stop right where you are. My cabin's not open to public inspection!"

"A Lot of Good Timber Gone in That Blaze, Van," Muttered McCrossen.

"I don't give a damn for your cabin. There's Jane," the foreman shouted, "standing in the doorway."

Jane ran across the yard to the angry men. "Father!" she cried. "What in the world are you doing here? What brought you from the hospital?"

Her father's deep-set, piggy eyes flashed his fury on her. "You brought me here," he snapped savagely. "You wench! Living with this man, are you?" "Father!" Outraged womanhood never spoke the word more stingingly. "Is it possible you insult me so vilely before you have heard a single word?" she said. "What have I to do with your grudges and quarrels?"

Rigid and erect, storming within and striking with white-hot words at her parent's base intonation, Jane silenced the men about her by her outraged dignity.

"What shameful words have you heard—and from whom?" she barely indicated her father's companion by a lightning flash of her eye—"that put such vile thoughts into your head?" She waited for no answer. "I rode to the peak of Gunlock Knob to see how the fire was heading—it has threatened Gunlock Ranch for two days. When I tried to ride down this afternoon, the fire cut me off. I should have been burned to death where I stood on the peak, if Bill Denison hadn't ridden up through another fire to save me. And now after fighting our way for hours through smoke and flame, he brings me down by the only possible way, to hear me foully insulted by my own father. This is too much!"

Van Tassel had not dreamed that a mere insult—his usual weapon toward everybody—would arouse anyone, much less his daughter, to such a pitch. Her buttoned blouse, torn rudely open at the neck by a forest branch, and her tie awry, revealed the girlish ivory of her throat and neck, while her hot words silenced the domineering brute before whose insolence few men could stand at ease.

"Look here, Jane!" bellowed her father in retreat. "You come out here for your health, didn't you?"

"I didn't come out here to be grossly insulted," she retorted. "Where's your pony?"

"Heaven knows where it is, or where Bill Denison's is. I hope they're not burned up."

"Well, come along home. McCrossen will lend you his horse."

"He needn't. I will walk home just as soon as I have cooked some bacon for Bill Denison."

"Come along now."

"Did you hear me? I'll come home"

—each word was defiantly emphasized

—when I have made coffee and cooked bacon for Bill Denison. When you get home, be kind enough to ask Bill Page to saddle a horse for me and bring it over." With this, Jane walked swiftly back to the cabin. Van Tassel, in a muttering rage, followed by McCrossen, started home.

A slender supper was at length got together. Then Jane made Denison lie back in a chair and submit to cold compresses on his eyes.

Waiting for Bill Page proved no hardship, but when the hands of Denison's little alarm clock pointed to midnight it dawned on Jane that her request had been ignored and that her father or McCrossen had meant she should walk home or compromise herself by staying all night at Denison's.

She boiled a bit inside when she realized the situation, but prepared to walk. To this Denison would not listen. He got up two ponies—he had but one extra saddle—and, despite her objections and protests, insisted on riding home with her.

It needed no announcer in the morning to tell Jane that her father had come home. She lay, exhausted and with every bone in her body aching, beyond her usual rising time. But there was an unusual scurrying about outside her room. Quong, old and wrinkled, was the only man of the household not in the least perturbed by the surprise return of Van Tassel.

Jane came to the table as her father was leaving it. "I want to see you after breakfast," was the gruff greeting he vouchsafed Jane.

She found Van Tassel seated at his desk in his bedroom, looking over bills. Jane went up to him.

"I could hardly believe my eyes when I saw you yesterday, father," she said coldly. "Did the doctor give you permission to come home?"

After a shuffling of papers came the first shot at Jane: "What did you fire McCrossen for?"

"Because he refused to obey orders," she retorted instantly.

"Whose orders?"

"My orders."

"Who owns this ranch?"

"You do. And," she added, keen-eyed, "you made me manager."

"I'll take that job off your shoulders. McCrossen is foreman here now. And I am boss. Now what about this skunk, Denison?"

"What about Mr. Denison, father?"

"He's a crook. And as long as you live, keep away from him."

"What has he ever done to you that's wrong, father?"

"He and his brother's been trying for five years to beat me out of Gunlock Spring and all that ranch land back of it."

"That's part of what he's done to me. He's stole my cattle besides. McCrossen is the only man that stayed by me through thick and thin. McCrossen's the right man for you. You can get married tomorrow if you want to."

"I haven't the slightest idea of getting married tomorrow, father. And if Mr. McCrossen were the only man left, I certainly should never marry. There's not a straight hair in his head. He's been robbing you for years."

"Sounds like that skunk Denison's been filling your ears for you."

"Bill Denison's barely ever mentioned McCrossen's name to me."

"Well, keep away from Denison for good, don't forget that."

Jane flinched inwardly but spoke low and clearly. "I can't promise that, father."

"Why not?"

"I don't think it's right."

"Ain't I your father?"

"Yes."

"Ain't a parent a-goin' to be obeyed?"

"If he is reasonable. I'm not a child, father."

He grew furlous. "I don't give a damn what you are, you're not a-goin' to take up with any enemy of mine, 'n' you might just as well know it now—and I'll see that you don't."

Van Tassel, quitting the house, rode with McCrossen, over the hills burned the day before, to determine what further measures should be taken to insure safety for the ranch buildings. The two men halted at the foot of Gunlock Knob.

"A lot of good timber gone in that blaze, Van," muttered McCrossen.

Van Tassel was silent for a moment. "The ranch ain't worth as much as it was yesterday, that's sure," he said at last. Then after another pause: "I wouldn't mind the timber if the damned fire had held on till it cleaned out Denison."

Both were looking down on the neighbor's ranch.

"I wish I was rid of that fellow."

Van Tassel's words fairly grated out of his harsh throat. Why couldn't that blamed fire have cleaned out his buildings yesterday?

"It was a close scratch. If the wind had shifted—"

Lesson for November 1

LAW, LOVE, AND TEMPERANCE

(International Temperance Sunday)

LESSON TEXT—Romans 13:1-14.
GOLDEN TEXT—It is good neither to eat flesh, nor to drink wine, nor anything whereby thy brother stumbleth. Rom. 14:21.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Why We Keep Rules.
JUNIOR TOPIC—Junior Citizens.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—What Shall We Do About Drinking?
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Law, Love, and Temperance.

Revolution, political disorder, anarchy—these are words which characterize much of the world's news of our day. What should be our attitude toward government? Should a Christian participate in revolts against government? These are questions that stir the hearts of men.

The Bible has an answer, and it is found in our lesson for today. Let us study it with care and seek God's message for us and for our nation in these utterly confusing days.

We consider together a portion of Paul's epistle to the Romans in which, having laid his superb doctrinal foundation, he turns to a practical application. Let us ever remember that while right doctrine is necessary to right living, it is never sufficient to hold the doctrine and fail to permit it to control our daily walk.

Good citizenship of the true type is the result of staunch Christian character. Much of the weakness in our political and social life can be traced to the neglect of the things of God in the home, the school, and the church.

Paul presents the Christian as one who has the right attitude toward his neighbors, and toward his own daily walk. The Christian is

I. Politically-Intelligent and Loyal (vv. 1-7).

Lectures on political economy are well worth while. School children should learn to love and honor their country. But for real intelligent citizenship we must have a study of God's Word. For all governmental authority is dependent on a God-given power. No man has any right to rule over any other man except as God delegates that right to him.

No "divine right of kings" is justified by this passage, but clearly it does teach that government is ordained of God and functions by his providence. To resist such authority is to resist God.

Must we always obey the government? Yes; until it commands us to do that which is clearly contrary to the laws of God. We do not resist or question the authority of any properly appointed governmental agency, no matter how weak, or even wicked the agent may be, as long as he acts as "a minister of God . . . for good." Any government is better than anarchy. But no government has the right to command any man to disobey God.

In our land we have a powerful agency for the correction of governmental weakness and error—the ballot box. Let every Christian use it discreetly and in the fear of God.

Before leaving the passage, note that the Christian does not dodge, "fix," or leave unpaid the taxes which support the government under whose benefits he lives and works. There is too much dishonesty at this point, and we need to correct it.

II. Socially-Honest and Loving (vv. 8-10).

"Love thy neighbor as thyself" and there will be no social dishonesty, strife, and ill-will. Remember the lesson of last week on love—I Corinthians 13.

III. Personally-Clean and Spiritual (vv. 11-14).

The time when our redemption is to be fully completed—that is, when the Lord himself returns—is at hand. We therefore will not live as those who walk in darkness, but as children of the light, clean in life and thought. We will "put on the Lord Jesus Christ."

In these days when almost every roadside store and hundreds of thousands of city buildings have been converted into drinking places far worse than the old-time saloon, when men and women are making drunken sots of themselves, it is indeed time for Christians to raise their voices in protest and to act to protect the boys and girls of America.

But above all—let us win them to Christ, for if they "put on Christ" they will "make no provision for the flesh to fulfill the lusts thereof."

Respect for Parents

Honor your parents in your hearts; bear them not only awe and respect, but kindness and affection; love their persons, and fear to do anything that may justly provoke them.—Rev. W. Craddock.

Good Neighbors

It is a small thing to a man whether or not his neighbor be merciful to him; it is life or death to him whether or not he be merciful to his neighbor.

Curse of Progress

Non-Stop
After an hour and a half of preaching, a clergyman who was given to both long-windedness and fanciful flights of oratory was just getting warmed up to his sermon on immortality.
"I looked up to the mountains," he shouted, "and I said, 'Mighty as you are, you will be destroyed; but my soul will not.' I gazed at the ocean and cried, 'Vast as you are, you will eventually dry up, but not I.' " And then he wondered why his hearers smiled. — Tit-Bits Magazine.

How it Happened
Blinks looked a wreck. His face was covered with sticking-plaster; both eyes were black; and his left arm was in a sling.
"What happened?" a friend asked.
"A motor accident?"
"No; a loose floorboard."
"Tripped over it?"
"No; trod on it, as I was sneaking in the other night and woke the missus up."

Household Questions

A few bread crumbs added to scrambled eggs improves flavor and makes an extra serving possible.

Two tablespoons of vinegar added to one cup of sweet milk will turn it into sour milk. Let stand for three minutes before using.

Before laundering lace curtains soak them for an hour in cold water to which a little borax has been added. Then wash in warm soap suds.

A little hot milk added a little at a time while mashing potatoes will make them light and fluffy. Heat but do not boil the milk.

A pinch of salt added to egg whites before they are beaten helps stiffen them.

To protect paper when cleaning paint use a piece of heavy cardboard about 12 inches square, moving it along as you wash paint.

Knit and crocheted frocks should never be hung from closet hooks or hangers if they are to keep their shape. Even eyelet cotton frocks will stretch less if folded and laid flat, or hung doubled across a wooden hanger. © Bell Syndicate.—WNU Service.

Don't Sleep When Gas Presses Heart

If you want to really GET RID OF GAS and terrible bloating, don't expect to do it by just doctoring your stomachs with harsh, irritating alkalies and "gas tablets." Most GAS is lodged in the stomach and upper intestine and is due to old poisonous matter in the constipated bowels that are loaded with ill-causing bacteria.
If your constipation is of long standing, enormous quantities of dangerous bacteria accumulate. Then your digestion is upset. GAS often presses heart and lungs, making life miserable. You can't eat or sleep. Your head aches. Your back aches. Your complexion is sallow and pimply. Your breath is foul. You are a sick, grouchy, wretched, unhappy person. YOUR SYSTEM IS POISONED.
Thousands of sufferers have found in Adlerika the quick, scientific way to rid their systems of harmful bacteria. Adlerika rids you of gas and cleans foul poisons out of BOTH upper and lower bowels. Give your bowels a REAL cleansing with Adlerika. Get rid of GAS. Adlerika does not grip — is not habit forming. Leading Druggists.

LET'S SAVE $500,000

THERE IS AN ISSUE IN THIS COUNTY CAMPAIGN. THE FIGHT BETWEEN THE TWO CANDIDATES FOR STATE'S ATTORNEY MEANS SOMETHING TO THE TAXPAYERS OF WILL COUNTY. IF MR. BURKE WINS, IT IS PROBABLE THAT THE LAW SUITS NOW PENDING TO COLLECT $500,000 BELONGING TO THE COUNTY--

THE TAX PAYERS

WILL BE TREATED LIGHTLY AND NOT VIGOROUSLY PROSECUTED. IF FRANCIS J. LOUGHRAN IS ELECTED THE SUITS WILL BE PROSECUTED AND THIS LARGE SUM OF MONEY WILL BE SAVED AND THE TAXPAYERS WILL BENEFIT THEREBY.

IT IS REMARKABLE THAT MR. BURKE IN THIS CAMPAIGN HAS TALKED ABOUT EVERYTHING BUT THE THREE LAWSUITS NOW PENDING. MR. LOUGHRAN, ON THE OTHER HAND, HAS CONSTANTLY CALLED THIS IMPORTANT QUESTION TO THE ATTENTION OF THE PUBLIC.

"I WILL COLLECT THE MONEY AND CHASE THE TAX RUSTLERS OUT OF THE COUNTY AS WELL AS THE CATTLE RUSTLERS," SAYS MR. LOUGHRAN.

"I WAS AN ASSISTANT STATE'S ATTORNEY AND I PROSECUTED ALL CASES TRIED DURING MY INCUMBENCY IN THAT POSITION," SAYS THE REPUBLICAN CANDIDATE.

MR. BURKE DOES NOT SAY HE WILL COLLECT THE $10,800 MR. REHN -- HIS FORMER EMPLOYER -- OWES THE COUNTY.

NOR DOES HE, OR HIS POLITICAL WRITE-UPS, MENTION THE NAME OF THE STATE'S ATTORNEY HE WORKED UNDER AS AN ASSISTANT. MR. BURKE DOES NOT SAY HE WILL FORCE COLLECTION OF THE MONEY ALBION F. DELANDER OWES THE COUNTY.

MR. BURKE DOES NOT SAY HE WILL COLLECT THE TREMENDOUS SUM OF MONEY NOW DUE WILL COUNTY FROM HERBERT R. JONES, FORMER COUNTY TREASURER.

MR. BURKE DOES NOT SAY THESE MEN ARE ALL REPUBLICANS AND THAT HE WILL CARRY ON THE SUITS STARTED BY ANOTHER REPUBLICAN WHO PAID THE PRICE FOR FEARLESSNESS IN THE APRIL PRIMARIES.

THERE IS AN ISSUE. IT DEALS WITH MONEY. IT SHOULD MEAN MUCH TO THE TAXPAYER. THEY SHOULD ELECT A MAN WHOM THE REPUBLICANS CANNOT PUNISH. THE PEOPLE'S MONEY IS GONE. IT SHOULD BE BACK IN THE PUBLIC TREASURY.

ELECT FRANCIS J. LOUGHRAN AND IT WILL BE RETURNED.

ELECT BURKE AND THE OLD COURTHOUSE GANG WILL BREATHE EASY AFTER FOUR YEARS OF RESTLESSNESS.
